

Thank you For your Download!

I am so glad you are ready to work on fluency with your students this year. Please be sure to read the directions on my blog (where you downloaded these cards) to get a thorough understanding of how I use each one to help introduce the components of fluency. When you're done teaching these lessons, here are so me more fluency task cards that your students will love.

FLUENCY TASK CARDS

Taylor strolled down Cornelia Street. Her gaze followed the buildings towering above her. She saw a taxi in the distance and raised her arm in an attempt to signal the driver. He flew past her like a getaway car. "Welcome to New York!" she mumbled to herself as she looked down the street for another taxi.

I simply can't believe what I just saw! It was grosser than the hair in my cereal. More disgusting than toenail clippings littering the floor. Even worse than the swampy water I stepped in yesterday. Trust me. It was, hands down, the most vile thing I have ever seen.

FLUENCY TASK CARDS

You won't believe what just happened! I was walking down that street. Shucks. I can't remember the name of it... that one by the school. Do you know which one I'm talking about? Anyway. I was walking down the street when I saw it. The cutest, sweetest, tiniest, little duckling you have ever seen. I thought it was all alone, but after a moment, the mama duck came waddling up behind it. It totally made my day! I only wish I would have had my camera to take a picture.

FLUENCY TASK CARDS

Rick was running as fast as he could down the road. His feet hit the pavement like a cheetah, speeding by house after house after house. Coins jingled in his pocket as he raced down the street. He raised his hands in the air to flag down the ice cream man.

"HEY!" he shouted, nearly out of breath. "WAIT! WAIT! WAIT! I'm almost there!" he gasped as the truck, and its load of creamy, dreamy ice cream drove out of sight.

FLUENCY TASK CARDS

Blake dropped her backpack the second she walked in the front door. Her eyes lit up when she saw the cake on the table and the neatly wrapped present next to it. When she spotted grandma and grandpa, though, her face exploded into an ear-to-ear smile and she ran toward them. They said they weren't going to make it, but here they were! It was the greatest birthday gift she had ever received.
